Kentucky School Laws.

In Kentucky teachers must obtain certificates of qualification signed by at least two members of either the county or State examining board. The county board consists of the county school commissioner and two persons chosen by him as assistants; the State board, of the Superintendent of Public Instruction and two professional educators appointed by him. The county board grants certificates of two classes with two grades in each class. The law prescribes that "those who understand clearly the principles involved in the subjects to be taught, as well as the forms in which they are expressed, shall be entitled to first class first grade certificates; those who know the forms well and have a knowledge of principles, but not clear, shall be entitled to first class second grade certificates; those who know the forms well, but not the principles, shall be entitled to a second class first grade certificate." Further definition of the qualifications necessary to procure a certificate of the several classes and grades is left to the State board of education. It is customary for the Superintendent of Public Instruction to furnish the various boards of examiners with printed questions and to require 75 per cent. of correct answers for a first class first grade certificate, 60 per cent. for a first class second grade certificate, and 50 per cent. for a second class certificate.

The State board of examiners issues only first class first grade certificates. The studies in which candidates are examined are divided into three groups. If a candidate falls below the average required in any group or below the minimum in any study a certificate is not granted. The only studies outside of the usual common school course in which candidates are examined are physiology and hygiene. The State board meets on the first Wednesday of July; the county boards on the third and fourth Saturday of January, July, August and December. First class first grade certificates are valid four years; others, except temporary licenses, two years.

Thomas Pettit Talks Back at Colonel Jones and Gives His Side.

Owensboro Messenger: Overtaking Mr. Pettit, one of the Secretaries of the recent Democratic State Convention on the streets yesterday morning, a representative of the Messenger inquired if he had seen Col. Jones' interview in the Louisville Post on Friday last?

"Yes," said Mr. Pettit.

"Well, what do you think anyway," persisted the questioner after convention items.

"If you must know, continued Mr. Pettit, 'I think Colonel Jones is a very greatly disappointed man; he had set his heart on being Governor of Kentucky, and being defeated in the recent contest with Knott by only a fraction of one vote does seem rather rough; but he is too old a politician to come out as an independent candidate. Should he do so, would at once lose his deservedly high standing in the party, and moreover, the Republican candidate would march to the polls hundreds of votes while Jones would only number his by the score. It would only tend to bring out the 'unterrified,' and magnify Knott's majority almost beyond computation." But hold on, we are not through," in chimed the Messenger man, as Mr. P. was about to disappear.

"Colonel Jones says that the tellers at the convention held back the result, particularly yourself as secretary; what have you to say about that?"

"Oh, well," replied our good natured citizen, "Colonel Jones knows as well as you that the statement is not true. If he had no higher appreciation of myself than to think so meanly of me, the facts surrounding the case would teach him better. In accordance with all parliamentary practice, after a ballot is called, any county has a right to change its vote; and by an express rule of this convention it was provided, that, 'upon the call of the counties to vote, should its delegates not be ready to vote, such county shall be passed and not again called until the vote shall have been completed, when such passed counties shall be again called in their order, and their votes recorded. With this rule stating the officers of the convention in the face, was it their province to immediately announce the vote, even, if the computation had been made? There was a case in point: Elliott county had been passed under this rule, and it was known that the vote would be cast for Col. Jones. It was Jones' right-hand man in the person of Col. Wall, of Mason, claiming the privilege of the floor. Was his purpose to den and that the Secretary or Tellers should announce the vote? Not at all. That was exactly the thing Jones' did not want done. They wanted the vote of Elliott county recorded before its announcement, and the first step to accomplish it was to secure the adoption of the report of the Committee on Credentials especially relating to this ballot. Pending this Elliott county subject, and before any decision, entered the Owen county controversy; and at no time could any official of the convention have announced the vote of the seventh ballot, except in violation of all rules of such deliberative bodies, common sense and fair dealing."

"Wait my friend," said Mr. Pettit, as the newspaper man was about to leave. "I'll give you one other point that looks like Colonel Jones is catching at a straw. In the Post interview you will observe he says 'that Mr. Caldwell says he did not declare the vote of Owen for Knott, but Pettit did. See the seeming insinuation? That I assumed to cast the vote of Owen for Knott; that it did not pertain to my duties. As Secretary, I called the roll in alphabetical form; chairmen of the county delegates announced their vote, and to avoid mistakes it was the undeviating custom to reiterate the response. I did the same with Jones' Elliott county votes and every other county's vote without an exception, and it was my duty so to do. The chairman only announces the result of the summing up of all the counties, and no one ought to know it better than Colonel Jones himself."

With this center-stroke Mr. Pettit and the reporter parted, thoroughly convinced that no law can legitimately be picked with the Democratic party's nominees or actions.
